"I help good people overcome bad situations." That is how David Reddell describes his practice of law. "Whether it's a criminal or civil case, clients come to me when they are facing monumental problems," Reddell explains.

Reddell always wanted to be a lawyer; and once he got into the courtroom, the results have spoken for themselves. As a prosecutor, he never lost a felony jury trial. In addition, Reddell has been featured in Texas Lawyer and nationally in The National Law Journal for his efforts in the courtroom.

After serving as an assistant district attorney, Reddell helped found Plezia, McLemore, Reddell, Ardoin & Story, P.L.L.C. with a select group of preeminent attorneys. Jim Story, another partner in the firm, often works together with Reddell on civil and criminal cases throughout the state. Theirs is a highly successful trial team that began when they served as prosecutors together.

Reddell's cases all begin the same way: the powerful corporation, insurance company or government versus an individual. "I give a voice to those who have no voice, an army to those who have no troops and a winning strategy to those who have no plan."

Focus: Criminal defense and personal injury

Education: South Texas College of Law, J.D.
